

VESSEL GALLERY

LONDON

James Lethbridge (1979 -)

Midas Jar

Circa: 2015

2015

United Kingdom

Glass with gold gilding

58.5 x 25 x 25 cm (23 x 9 7/8 inches)

'Midas Jar' is a unique glass sculptural vessel by the British artist, James Lethbridge.

Gaining a reputation for his unique artworks, Lethbridge produces one-off sculptural and lighting pieces, each incorporating a multitude of glass thorns, shards and tendrils. Created with an inventive yet repetitious approach to glass making, Lethbridge's pieces are instantly recognisable, highly desired and truly one of a kind.

The sources of inspiration in his own words:

“Through the study of botanical sources of inspiration, my work exists as pieces of collected, abstracted, surreal and almost alien pieces of sculptural glass. Derived from many different points of reference, such as twisting vines and microscopic pollen, I explore form, space, material and texture, using only the purity and fluidity of hot transparent glass and light. Through my work I attempt to communicate my feelings towards the material adding a flourish of organic surrealism” □

The artist can also create pieces to commission, please contact the gallery for further information.

Artist description:

After initially following a career choice in production ceramics in 1998 and gaining an in-depth knowledge of ceramic processes, Lethbridge was lured in 2003 to study glass. This was to be a life-changing moment as this new medium soon become his material of choice. Enthralled by the transparency and liquid nature of molten glass, repetitive throwing made way for a more experimental making process. In 2005 Lethbridge applied to the Royal College of Art where he expanded his range of glass skills as well as greatly increasing his body of work, both aiding his confidence and belief in his chosen practice.

Since graduating, Lethbridge has developed a reputation for his unique artworks, creating one-off sculptural and lighting pieces. With an inventive approach to glass making, Lethbridge's pieces are instantly recognisable and highly desired. His glass pieces often incorporate a multitude of glass thorns, shards and tendrils. The act of repetitious making has stayed a constant for Lethbridge but now with entirely different end results.

With many of his works, Lethbridge uses antique jars, each with their unique characteristics, which he envelopes with his signature glass adornments.

The sources of inspiration in his own words;

“Through the study of botanical sources of inspiration, my work exists as pieces of collected, abstracted, surreal and almost alien pieces of sculptural glass. Derived from many different points of reference, such as twisting vines and microscopic pollen, I explore form, space, material and texture, using only the purity and fluidity of hot transparent glass and light. Through my work I attempt to communicate my feelings towards the material adding a flourish of organic surrealism.”

Artist portrait courtesy of the artist.