

VESSEL GALLERY

LONDON

Nicholas Collins (1973 -)

Zigzag Table

Circa: 2017

2017

United Kingdom

Glass and stainless steel

65 x 65 x 50 cm (25⁵/₁₆ x 25⁵/₁₆ inches)

Influenced by a long-standing fascination with optical art and minimal designs that hold the viewers attention, Collins' aim is to create functional pieces that play with the viewer.

He employs a simple combination of colour, pattern and form to create complex designs held within his glass. Sheets of opaque and semi transparent glass are cut in to various shapes and waved lines which are then reassembled and fired as one. The contrasting glass used exaggerates each pattern, allowing light to pass through some sections more than others, creating ethereal shadows and patterns on the surface on which they rest.

In his own words;

“My philosophy is to produce exceptionally designed pieces, creating objects that bring together both function and visual appeal with a permanent value”

Literature:

Unique

Artist description:

Influenced by a long-standing fascination with optical art and minimal designs that hold the viewers attention, Collin's aim is to create functional pieces that play with the viewer.

He employs a simple combination of colour, pattern and form to create complex designs held within his glass. Sheets of opaque and semi transparent glass are cut in to various shapes and waved lines which are then reassembled and fired as one. The contrasting glass used exaggerates each pattern, allowing light to pass through some sections more than others, creating ethereal shadows and patterns on the surface on which they rest.

In his own words;? "My philosophy is to produce exceptionally designed pieces, creating objects that bring together both function and visual appeal with a permanent value"